Dream #5 Asteroid Strike, On or about Oct.1, 2011 I had a very disturbing dream. I was somewhere out in a semi-wooded area which appeared to be about 30 miles or so from a large city, maybe less.

There were many other people at this location as well. Some of which seemed familiar, and others that were not, when suddenly there was an extremely loud thunderous roaring from the sky that was so loud and deafening that had a person been standing next to me yelling in my ear, I would not have been able to hear them above the loudness of the noise.

Everybody looked up to see what it was, and it was an object shooting down to the earth from the sky. It sounded like a very loud rocket or missile, but it was difficult to discern for certain what it actually was. However, it was extremely fast, so extremely fast that it was almost beyond comprehension. It was travelling so incredibly fast that from the time I first heard it, to the time it impacted the earth was only a mere 10 seconds or so. That is, from the time I first heard it, and then looked up to see what it was, to the time it took me to quickly say, "Father, forgive us of our sins", the object had already impacted the earth.

When this object, or missile, or whatever it was, impacted, it struck the large city described earlier; and the explosion was like that of a nuclear bomb; just a huge bright white flash followed by a mushroom cloud. Everybody instantly dropped everything and ran to their vehicles and drove off in an attempt to outrun the blast or whatever else might befall us. There was no hesitation by anybody whatsoever.

But the winds created from the impact/blast overtook us and travelled that estimated 30 miles or so in just a matter of perhaps another 10 seconds. I thought for certain that we were all doomed to receive radiation poisoning at minimum; but somehow sensed that either there was no significant radiation from this event, or that we were supernaturally protected from it. I am not sure which one, I just sensed that none of us were going to receive radiation poisoning from this event; and then I woke up.

I had no sense of direction and so do not know which big city it was that I saw in the distance, (because no city was clearly identified in my dream, I have removed the name of the city in my area as a potential candidate. The name was removed 10-8-2011). I have no impression of where I was in this dream other than being a relatively short distance away from a large city in a semi-wooded country setting.

Likewise, this was an event that was impossible to be prepared for. There was no warning, It just happened almost instantaneously. From the time we first heard it, to the time of the impact, to the time the winds from the impact/blast overtook us 15 to 30 miles or so away was only a mere 20 seconds or so, and you were either prepared by that instant of time in your life to meet death, or you were not. Just that fast, and everything was over. Everything as we know it was gone and forever changed, and our lives never the same from that point onward.

After thinking about the dream some more, I realized I had left out some details. Though I do not know which direction I was facing, I do know that I had to look behind myself over my right shoulder to look for the source of the tremendous rocket like noise, and that when the item impacted the earth, it was slightly to my left front between 15 and 30 miles from where I was standing.

That is, "if" I was facing north, then it would have been travelling north westerly, or if facing west, then it would have been travelling south westerly. Likewise, if I was facing south, it would have been travelling south easterly, and if facing east, then it would have been travelling north easterly. I lean towards northwesterly as the actual direction of travel, but cannot say with any absolute certainty that it was northwesterly.
